According to David Callahan; an ever larger and richer upper class is amplifying its influence through large-scale giving in an era when it already has too much clout... Things are going to get worse, too... Part of the problem lies in the broad way that philanthropy is defined: Under the federal tax code, an organization that feeds the hungry can count as a philanthropy, and so can a university where students study the problem of hunger, and so, too, can a think tank devoted to downplaying hunger as a problem...
