complexity observed in the integral LHC family has been attributed to multiple rounds of intra- and inter-genic gene duplication events 20A large gene super-family encodes integral LHCs, and a significant level of sequence similarity has been detected between the protein complexes 21Phylogenetic analysis of LHCs and LHC-like protein super-families indicate that the ancestor is most likely a central group of two-helix stress-enhanced proteins that had previously evolved from a gene-duplication event of the high-light induced proteins of cyanobacteria 44. However, based upon sequence divergence, it is reasonable to assume that different clades of acpPC may have different functions. Hi Jamie, Thank you for this elaborate explanation!.
